Los Angeles – Visit the Getty Center on Saturday, May 3, for an enjoyable evening of film and conversation about Jackson Pollock’s Mural with award-winning actor and filmmaker Ed Harris, who spent close to a decade working on the film Pollock. Also on the panel will be Pollock film score composer Jeff Beal; art historian and Pollock expert Pepe Karmel who served as an advisor on the film; and panel host Tom Learner, head of science at the Getty Conservation Institute, which is presenting the event.

Held on Saturday, May 3, the screening of the film Pollock begins at 4pm, with the panel discussion at 6:30pm. Tickets are free, but reservations are recommended. Parking at the Getty is $10 after 5 pm.

Jackson Pollock’s first large-scale painting, Mural (1943), now on view at the Getty Center through June 1, in many ways represents the birth of the Pollock legend. Mural’s creation has been recounted in dozens of books and also dramatized in the Oscar-winning film Pollock, directed and starred in by Ed Harris.
Rumors about this seminal work abound—that it was painted in one alcohol-fueled night, that it didn’t originally fit the intended space, and that the basis of the painting is the artist’s name, among others. Yet, there was never a doubt that the creation of the painting was pivotal, not only for Pollock’s career, but for Abstract Expressionism, which would follow the artist’s radical conception of art—"no limits, just edges."

ABOUT THE PANEL

Jeff Beal came to Los Angeles in 1993, after his "Concerto for Jazz Bass" was recorded by John Patitucci on Chick Corea's new label. His big break came when Ed Harris called on him to score his directorial debut Pollock (2000). Beal's unique blend of Americana, minimalism, and chamber orchestra caught the ear of many in Hollywood where he is now a well-regarded and award-winning composer of music for film, television, recordings, and the concert hall.

Pepe Karmel is an associate professor of art history at New York University. His areas of expertise and research include Picasso, Pollock, Cubism, Minimalism, Contemporary Art, Critical Theory, and Art and Perception. For the film Pollock he served as an advisor to Ed Harris.

Tom Learner is head of Science and leads the Getty Conservation Institute's Modern and Contemporary Art Research Initiative. Recently he has been collaborating with the Getty Museum on the ongoing study and conservation of Jackson Pollock's landmark painting Mural, which is on view at the Getty Center through June 1, 2014.
